it will not be supposed extravagant to say, that he is "a little lower than the angels." Until within a few months it has been a barren desire on my part, to see this great and beautiful region personally during my life.—The distance seemed too great—my time of life, approaching four score years—the difficulties of the season—domestic engagements, and necessities—all had concurred during a long life, to deprive me not only of this great enjoyment, but even of the hope of ever partaking of it.

About four months ago, a learned Society in the city of Cincinnati did me the honor to send a great distance and invite me to come and share with them in the performance of an act, very simple and common in itself, but in my opinion one significant of that great influence upon the condition of man on earth, which I have said I hope and believe this country is destined to exert. It was to lay the foundation of an edifice, the object of which was that the human race might be made better acquainted with the firmament of Heaven, upon which we all look with wonder and astonishment, and which in some manner, we know not how, is our final destination—in a better world. There was so much, not in the act itself—for it was a very common performance, that of the mason—but there was so much of association for all future time, for this great and growing empire, connected with the act, as estimated by me, that without the hesitation of a moment I determined to accept the invitation, at whatever hazard. I do not say the hazard was great—but whatever it might be, and whatever came, I would accept the invitation—And so entirely absorbed was my mind in feelings associated with that institution, that it did not even occur to me, at the time, that it would afford me an opportunity of enjoying that blessing, as I may with propriety call it, of seeing this new empire of the West, which I had so long desired in vain to behold.

In process of performing the journey, necessary for accomplishing the object which I had undertaken, I have traversed, besides part of my native commonwealth, three different States of the Union—great, powerful, most respectable States—New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio. In traversing the Western States, I have met everywhere, assemblies like that now before me—caring little, perhaps nothing, for the object which was the single purpose of my journey, but disposed to manifest towards me personally such feelings as I know not how to allude to without deep emotion—such as, through a long life, it has been my lot to experience very little of—such as, in their extent, I had not the most distant idea of believing that I deserved; but such as if a man absorbed in the deepest feelings of patriotism that fill the human heart, such as his most extravagant desires could scarcely equal, to crown his life. But on leaving my own home for the purpose I had in view, it was necessary for me to confine myself to the specific object for which I came. I have said to you that in accepting the invitation, it hardly occurred to me that an opportunity would be afforded me to meet my fellow citizens of the various States into or through which I should pass, and that I should receive from them that kind and affectionate treatment which has so utterly overpowered me.

It was necessary to confine myself to the specific object for which I came from home, and extend my journey no further than Cincinnati, which is at the distance of about a thousand miles; and under no circumstances whatever, extend my journey beyond that limit. On arriving in the city of Cincinnati, and even before that period, I had been honored with invitations from different parts of the State of Kentucky—particularly from Louisville, from Lexington, from Frankfort, and further from the State of Indiana, and even from St. Louis, in Missouri. All expressed the same kind affection towards me, and the same wish to see me, and tendered to me the same hospitalities. I have been led deeply to regret that it was not in my power to accept any of these invitations, and I say this now most particularly with reference to the city of Louisville, from which the first invitation came and which has been repeated in a flattering manner by the committee, so that were it possible, I should transgress my own determination, and give more time than is consistent with positive engagements for the purpose of going there.

Not only have I received invitations from public bodies and cities, but also from individuals, among the first of whom was that great man, your own citizen, who, during a very large portion of my public life, and in various public capacities, and in several instances in matters relating to your interests, has been my associate and friend, and the recollection of whom, brings me to the acknowledgment, before this whole assembly, that in all the various capacities in which I have known him to act, whether as associate, as assistant, or acting independently of me, in his own individual character and capacity, I have ever found not only one of the ablest men with whom I have ever co-operated, but also one of the most amiable and worthy. I have received a cordial invitation from him, to visit him at his residence. I have received one equally cordial and kind, from the gentleman who is now the Chief Magistrate of your Commonwealth, who from my own past knowledge of him, from having served with him in Congress, and from all I have seen of him, I esteem and cherish, not only as an able statesman, but one of the most charming social companions, whose acquaintance I have ever had.

I had scarcely arrived in the neighboring city of Cincinnati, before I received from the gentleman who has done me the honor to address you, in terms respecting myself which excited the affections of my breast, in a manner which language cannot express, a cordial invitation to visit him. I also had one from another friend, now in my eye, and whom while acting in the public service I regarded with high admiration.

It is impossible to comply with these invitations, any further than I do this day—I say it with deep regret, and repeat the words, that you may understand, that no other motive than the necessity of returning to my family, and my public duties, would prevent me, if time were allowed me, from visiting the whole State of Kentucky. For these invitations seem to increase, in number, power and cordiality, in proportion as I proceed; and the sentiment which I now feel, is an enjoyment of a high and honorable character.

The gentleman who has addressed me, has welcomed me to the soil of Kentucky, and in coming here, I feel that I am still on my native soil. Of the degree in which this sentiment now fills my heart, I know it is not possible for you to form a conception, but if you cannot, I invite you all to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and to my residence, and when you see how you are received there, you will be able to form a conception of my feelings here.

FELLOW CITIZENS—My honorable friend has intimated, that it would be agreeable and acceptable to you, that I should discourse to you on some of the experiences of my past life, in such a manner as should serve the purposes of instruction. I feel that I am inadequate to that office but if I could speak in words of instruction, I know not that I could say anything which would be more forcible to you, and which I would more desire should sink to the bottom of your hearts, than that very sentiment—and that is, that a citizen of Massachusetts coming into Kentucky, or a citizen of Kentucky going to Massachusetts, should consider himself still on his native soil.

My honorable friend has recurred to the long period of time, and the great diversity of stations, in which I have served the country—Through all that time, if I have learnt one lesson, which has been impressed more deeply upon my heart than any other, and which I more wish that I could give to my countrymen, from one extreme of the Union to another, it would be this,—and all should keep the sentiment at the bottom of their hearts,—that wheresoever they may be, whether in the North or the South, the East or the West, they are brethren of the same family, citizens of one common country—that the soul of every spot of its broad territory, is the native soul of all. In other respects the Commonwealth of Kentucky, needs as little instruction from abroad, as any part of the Union. It has furnished, it furnishes, men in great numbers equal to instruct the whole Union, instead of needing instruction for themselves. And now, although I have said that when I undertook the journey, from which I am now about to return, I little expected, I had no expectation of visiting the different cities of this part of the country beyond the Ohio, I will say to you, and conclude by assuring you, that, finding myself on the soil of Kentucky, I cannot but feel that it is still my native soil. I have been received, not as the prodigal son, returning to his father, but as a brother returning to the family of his brethren. I can say in my heart, that I consider this one of the happiest of my days. And I shall look back upon this interview, as among the events of my life, which I shall never cease to remember, while my heart continues to beat.

And in bidding you farewell, as I am obliged to do, in the very moment of your bidding me welcome, I will add my prayer, to the Sovereign Ruler of the World, that your fortunes hereafter may be happy, and glorious.

At the conclusion of his address Mr. Adams descended from the pulpit, and took by the hand hundreds of the Citizens of Covington—ladies and gentlemen—who will remember, while their lives continue, the warm pressure of that hand, which has labored so long and so ardently in the service of our common country, and the patriotic words of that tongue, which has dared to speak when all others were silent, in the cause of Truth and Justice, in the cause of Oppressed Mankind, and in the cause of Human Liberty throughout the world.

DAILY WHIG AND COURIER.

JOHN S. SAYWARD, Editor.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1843.

FOR PRESIDENT,

HENRY CLAY, OF KENTUCKY

SEE FIRST PAGE

The following communication has been handed us by Capt. Wellington, the Jailer in this city, and was written by one of the inmates of the county jail, who has been a teacher of youth, and a man of respectability and worth—it is a sober, solemn warning, that should be heeded. It speaks in trumpet tones of the towering evils of intemperance, and its blighting and disastrous effects. It appeals to rum makers and sellers—to moderate and immoderate drinkers, and to all who have any connection with those evil spirits of intoxication, and to all who are tempted to partake of them, even in their most attractive and innocent forms, to beware of its treacherous nature and the destruction to which they will inevitably lead.

We give the article in the form in which we received it, and trust that its monitions will not be unheeded by the community.

A Voice from the County Jail.

Whatever we may pretend, our happiness or our misery are the usual sources of our own seeking; or at least I find it such with the case I am about to narrate. I am now confined with in the walls of a County Jail; and for what? a crime, in which I am not the lone sufferer. A wife, poor and innocent, and her little daughter, are great sharers in my unlawful and outrageous procedure; destitute of a home and proper necessities of sustenance, which no one can comfortably do without, sick and broken hearted—

Pity, O pity! an innocent and virtuous woman and an inoffensive and helpless child. And what is the cause of this sad calamity? Intemperance. Who are the subjects of this Intemperance? I can say many, particularly the writer, who merely scribbles for a warning to others. Intemperance, that horrid, awful and disgusting monster,—it is but a very short time since I commenced cherishing the monster and took it to my bosom; and now, by Divine as-stance, I am determined to abolish it forever. In my candid and sober moments, nothing would tempt me to commit such a daring and outrageous act; but when influenced by strong drink, then courage was strong, reason absent, and temptation unavoidable; hence follow crimes; thence misery and destruction, of which I am a partaker. I bring myself before the public, merely with friendly circumspection, to admonish them of these growing evils; for, "as weeds, they will grow in the garden of God."

While we have the hydra monster vended, and artful men around us to encourage, tempt and allure, often to misrepresent; and weak men to misconceive, this is the time when such admonition is just. Why not stop the sale of it in all of those places where intoxicating liquors are vended and dealt out so profusely; let the Law be administered forcibly; then this vicinity would be a paradise to what it is now; however, of these ideas I will cast no reflections, notwithstanding we are in the midst of danger, when perhaps we think ourselves perfectly secure, even by indulging in one single glass. "Avoid temptation" by putting it away, that evil may not come upon us. Nothing would have made me believe that I could be an inmate of a Jail for crime; nor would it be so, if not for this fall.

Monster. As I have already stated, it is very recent since I have given loose reins to this horrid destroyer; I did, and where am I? the echo answers where am I. Shun it, O fellow man, as a deadly viper, before ruin becomes your habitation. Sign the pledge; for in almost every place there is a Temperance Society, which is innocent in its nature, and whose object is the welfare of mankind, and the very pith and marrow of this society is to promote Temperance, destroy evil, and encourage industry, for industry never was or ever will be the companion of Intemperance. I now trust I have received a hopeful repentance from such outrageous acts. I am determined to go forth from my confinement and proclaim against Intemperance and its attendant evils. Beware, O fellow man, I beseech you, to retreat from Intemperance, and avoid all temptation, be economical and industrious and you will be happy; if otherwise you will be forever miserable, for it is said, "A drunkard cannot enter the kingdom of Heaven." My friends have, as it were, forsaken me; yet I have been well treated by a few. My kind respects to the City Marshal for his kind and benevolent usage towards me; he is a gentleman worthy of the patronage of the generous public, for the punctual discharge of his duty and the Christian-like conduct towards the transgressor. My feelings towards the Jailer are respectful, for his goodness, patience and kind usage towards the unfortunate inmates of the Jail, he appears faithful and to be a gentleman. To those gentlemen against whom I have transgressed, I can say in sincerity, I have a feeling to call upon them to forgive my transgressions against them; for the God that made us could do no more. O pardon me, my God, and my fellow men, and encourage me yet to be a profitable member in society, "To err is human, to forgive, divine." Forgiveness is fulfilling the great law of Love.

AN INMATE.

Isaac Hill at length commits Gen. Jackson, fully and completely, as approving, with his whole heart the administration of John Tyler, since the withdrawal of Mr. Webster from the Cabinet. The General, it seems, has written several letters in which his approval not only extends to the President, but to every member of the Cabinet, all of whom, he thinks, are 'Democratic,' and are properly engaged in carrying out the true principles of Democracy!

This announcement will cause wry faces among certain leaders and editors of the party, who, probably not suspecting this fact, have spoken quite freely against the Tyler administration. Among this number we may reckon our amiable neighbor of the 'Democrat.' However, if what the Enquirer says of him be true, it will be no difficult task for him to agree with the General by a

"Turn about and wheel about."

The Belfast Signal states that at the last term of the District Court in that town, Benj. Shaw, Esq. of Frankfort, who had been indicted for a pretended embezzlement of the property of the Frankfort Bank, was honorably acquitted. I. C. McAllister was found guilty, and committed; but his attorney moved an arrest of judgment. He was permitted to give bail and go at large. The Brooks rioters were acquitted.

A Florida correspondent of the Savannah Republican says that it is the impression in many parts of the territory that the few Indians remaining in Florida, should be unmolested, and continue where they are; their services hereafter, in the unexplored country of the Peninsula, will be of incalculable advantage to Government.

The Bath Enquirer, loco, in its return of votes makes out that Morse lacks ten votes of being elected in the Gerrymander Congressional District, and expresses the opinion that the number of scattering votes will be larger, in the official count, than in the returns published.

It is a very close run, any way. But we cannot but hope and believe that Morse is elected.

We learn from the President of the Bank of Bangor that William P. Richardson has resigned the office of Cashier of that institution. His successor, we understand, has not yet been appointed.

The Emancipator was published by the Anti-Slavery Society seven years. During that period it cost the Society over and above receipts for the paper, about $20,000, making an average of about $3,000 annually.

The Whig State Convention assembled at Louisville on Monday of last week. William Orosley, of Frankfort, was nominated for Governor, and Archibald H. Dixon, of Henderson Co. for Lieutenant Governor.

The Albany Argus of Saturday says, we are informed by a gentleman who arrived here last evening from Lewis county, that the people of Martinsburg, Lowville, &c., and the northern part of Oneida, are favored with excellent sleighing.

It is the intention of a number of the natives of New England, resident in Philadelphia, to dine together on Thanksgiving Day, the 30th inst., and discuss the viands and history of the father land.

The Hon. Charles Hudson states that Massachusetts has more tonnage than any other State in the Union, and even owns 71,200 tons of shipping more than New York.

We regret to learn by the arrival of the Calendonia of the death of Miss Ann G. Everett, eldest daughter of our Minister at the Court of St. James, aged 20.

Our thanks are renewedly due to Col. Richardson, of Gilman & Co.'s Express, and also to Jerome's Express, for papers by the last boat.

The Charter Oak arrived yesterday, at half past 12 o'clock, having left Boston on Wednesday morning.

The Gazette of yesterday settles the question that neither Van Buren or Birney can be the next President of the United States.

It is well ascertained that there is no choice in the Waldo and Somerset Congressional District

Father Taylor.

We are happy to state that the health of our zealous fellow laborer in the sailor's cause is much improved. He has been near Smyrna, at the country seat of Mr. Langdon, for some time past. His voice is not wholly restored, and his throat is still somewhat troublesome.

He is supposed to be on his passage to this country, and will probably arrive in Boston some time about Christmas.—Sheet Anchor

The prospectus of the Standard the new Whig paper at Washington says:

"There are at this time five opposition papers at the Seat of Government, each, in its way, endeavoring to sap the foundations of the whig party, and blasting the prosperity of the country by the measures they propose. Shall we not rally against the foes excited by these emissaries, whose corrupt and atrocious motives are manifest by their early wrangling for spoils which they never can win?" We know the response of millions of freemen will be "Ay rally!" Already the "hum of either army still sounds;" already the general furnishing of arms "gives dreadful note of preparation," then let ours be a bright and death-dealing sword in the conflict. Let us rally a leader upon whose standard is inscribed "Liberty. Order, the Constitution," whose great political and personal virtues endear him to every generous heart, and whose patriotism has ever been exalted—let us rally for Henry Clay, the Statesman and Sage, the friend of the workingman, the idol of his country, which for forty years, next to his God, has had his chief care."

MEETING OF MERCHANTS.

IN consequence of the City Hall being previously engaged for the Lyceum on Thursday evening next, the meeting of Merchants, which was adjourned to that evening will be postponed to THURSDAY EVENING, Nov. 24th, at 7 o'clock—at which time a plan of operation will be proposed and the draft of a constitution submitted for adoption.
